Men's issues are an expression of men's feelings. Something men have long been taught not to express. Repressed feelings don't lead to personal growth. We hear almost exclusively about women's concerns and feelings.

When we think of nurturing we don't usually think of men. Some people think men aren't even capable of it. Consider Barbara Jordan's famous quote, "I believe that women have a capacity for understanding and compassion which a man structurally does not have, because he cannot have it. He's just incapable of it!"

What is nurturance?

Dictionary definition: Anything that nourishes; sustenance; food, the act of promoting development or growth; upbringing; rearing; educating; training. Steven Rhoads writes in Taking Sex Differences Seriously, differences in nurturing behavior between men and women are few if nurturance is defined as “caring for and promoting the welfare of others.” Mending a leaky roof would then be a nurturing act.

Men frequently aren't great at expressing feelings, and don't understand that sometimes women just want a listening ear. To them supporting a women is to help her with the problem that's upsetting her. That's taking the her problem seriously and that means helping find a solution. This is an act of love. It would be cruel to do less. Finding solutions to problems is one form of male nurturance.

Another often unrecognized form of nurturance is providing the financial basis or “financial womb” for a relationship. There are exceptions, but it still holds true in most cases. This can permit a woman to work part time, full-time or not at all, to being a stay at home mom, to do volunteer work or other things for recreation or personal growth. This role often doesn't hit home until after divorce or after a man loses his job. It is a traditional male role and as such is assumed and invisible.

Fathering through coaching is a form of nurturance/child-care that needs to be recognized. There is some vulnerability in this -- he wants the team to win, but also to learn fairness, responsibility, attitude and loosing -- and still have fun doing it. If the team loses, will he be seen as a nice guy loser, and lose respect? Can he coach with his son on the team and not play favorites?

What is the impact of male nurturance, particularly that of fathers?

A Danish study compared children who lived with their dads with those who lived with their mothers. It found boys and girls living with their mothers were 3 times more likely to feel victimized by other children, experienced seizures of fear 4 times more, and had twice as many nightmares.

Feminist theory states that because the female brain has a thicker connection between the right and left side women are better at juggling children, dishes, laundry, etc. And this makes them better nurturers. There is a good body of research that contradicts that assumption and shows that children do notably better with single fathers than they do with single mothers; using the same logic this would indicate that fathers are successful at juggling as well. The work men traditionally have done also require juggling skills when one looks at it more closely.

When fathers spend more time with children, a study which was done over a 6 year period show children are more likely to be more empathic in adulthood. Warren Farrell in Father and Child Reunion believes it has to do with dad’s style of discipline in enforcing boundaries. Teaching the child to treat boundaries seriously leads him or her to respect and consider others.

What are the barriers to male nurturance?

Single custodial mothers often acting as gatekeepers to their children seeing their father; almost 40% reported they had refused to let their ex’s see the children for punitive reasons. This could be remedied by a presumption of joint physical custody unless exceptional circumstances dictate otherwise.

Men including fathers do not speak up for themselves. Evolution over the millennia selected men for being willing do die for their families but not to cry on their own behalf. There is a change in father involvement, but this is a very quiet “revolution.” Men and women need to learn that it is OK for men to speak up for themselves and express their feelings, and we all need to accept that this is good and be willing to listen and encourage this new behavior.

Another father distancing factor is the overwhelming influence of the female value system -- in parenting, in elementary schools, in social work and in child protective services. Sitting still, raising your hands and speaking in turn are valued more than taking risks, experimenting and competition. This leads to boys not being accepted and loved for...
Greetings from the Chair

As TCMC heads into its 36th year of service to the men of the Twin Cities, I’d like to point out a few things to think about in the coming year.

But hold on, cue the sound of a phonograph needle scratching across a vinyl record, did I just say “36th” year? Because that’s an extraordinary thing that neatly illustrates two crucial things about TCMC in 2012.

First, demand for our services is as high or higher than ever before. This might seem obvious, but it’s worth pointing out that we have busy support groups and full anger management classes because of high demand. Second, TCMC has survived for this long because men who benefited from our services take it upon themselves to make sure that other men have the same opportunity to get through difficult times and better themselves as they had.

And that, in a nutshell, is how TCMC works. Men whose lives have changed for the better decide that the support and resources they found at TCMC are too valuable not to be made available to other men. So they contribute money, time, and energy to make sure TCMC survives to see another year.

For examples of this, you have to look no further than the TCMC board. Vice-chair Tom Weaver and board member Ken Knoll have put together a presentation for other non-profits who may be interested in partnering with TCMC and referring clients to us. If you are associated with, or know of a nonprofit that might be a nice fit with TCMC, please contact Tom through the TCMC office.

But you don’t have to be a board member to make a substantial contribution to TCMC’s future. Treasurer Rick Charlson has issued a challenge to everyone who cares about the future of TCMC by including a $2000 grant in the expected revenues part of the 2012 annual budget. Where will this grant come from? Nobody knows yet, but if you’d like to help us meet this obligation, you are encouraged to contact Rick or anyone on the board and tell us that you want to help plan, research, or write a grant.

There are many other exciting things happening at TCMC in 2012, but hopefully you see the pattern – for TCMC to continue to be a vibrant and essential resource for the men of the Twin Cities, it takes men who care, men like you, to step forward to and make it happen. Please join us in 2012!

their core energy. Some athletic skills are often not recognized in a broader context -- reading an opponent as an intuitive skill or teamwork as a relationship skill. This leads to boys not being reinforced and validated for what they have to offer.

One big factor influencing perceptions and attitude of men and fathers today is found in women’s studies without balancing men’s studies. One sided funding results in one-sided results -- from there, biased social policy. True equality starts with equality of inquiry. Balanced funding would be an important step in balancing our thinking and attitudes.

A REAL GOAL IS EQUALITY AND OPENNESS AND CARING FOR MEN, FOR WOMEN AND FOR CHILDREN.

It is important to recognize male nurturance and its unique contribution to our children, which hopefully will lead to constructive changes. The goal is not to diminish women and the nurturing they do, but to affirm men and the gifts they give.

Eric Christopher, MSMFT, CHT, has a background in Marriage and Family Therapy. He has been practicing hypnotherapy for the past 12 years in St. Paul.

The Perfect Storm?

Presenter: Keith Pederson
When: Wed, Feb. 22, 7:00-9:00 pm

Open to Men and Women

Historically, there have been many diseases that are thought to have been eradicated. Only to have prevention efforts dwindle, and the disease comes back full force.

Once HIV was discovered, named and responded to in the 1980’s the number of new transmissions began to decline. People were afraid of becoming HIV positive and dying! People talked openly about how the disease is transmitted and their behavior reflected safer sex activities. There was a time in our past when Syphilis had all but disappeared as well.

Fast forward to the current situation where new infections of Syphilis and HIV are on a dramatic incline (especially among men who have sex with men). In this presentation we will discuss some of the hypotheses thought to explain why we have the increasing new incidence of HIV and other STDs. We will also examine some of the painfully real economics contributing to a serious health care coverage issue facing our nation.

Finally, the combined views will paint the picture for you of what I believe is the beginning of The Perfect Storm!

Keith Pederson is the Project Coordinator for Man2Man, a Minnesota Department of Health HIV prevention program of the University of Minnesota, School of Public Health, Division of Epidemiology and Community Health. Keith also co-chairs the Community Cooperating Council on HIV and AIDS Prevention (CCCHAP). Keith’s education is a unique combination of multimedia communications, social work and GLBT studies.

Annual Facilitator Training report

We had 13 persons attending our Annual Facilitator Training on January 7th, following the Annual Meeting. Randy Genrich, and Norm Petrik led the training. We had excellent discussions about how to facilitate our support groups, which are a very important part of the Men’s Center. And we also had lunch paid for by the Men’s Center. Thank you facilitators for stepping forward to lead groups.

Norm Petrik, Chair Program Comm.
