At last! you may be thinking. Finally Minnesota has joined the ranks of civilized states in passing legislation for marriage equality. Time to celebrate, and time to congratulate ourselves on the hard work that brought this about. No doubt celebrations and congratulations are in order, but the work is not over. It's barely begun.

To date, there are still only a handful of U. S. states (twelve) that recognize marriage between any consenting couples, regardless of gender. We have much work to do changing the entrenched mindsets of much of this nation. And on a national stage, we may wait optimistically as legal challenges to California’s Prop 8 wind there way to the Supreme Court. But an outcome supporting national marriage equality is anything but assured, especially with such a conservative court.

The Huffington Post writes “We are watching a social revolution hit the Supreme Court. The only question is whether the justices slow it down a bit or accelerate it...” Slowing it down minimizes the real hurt caused by unjust tax treatment, unfair inheritance laws, and exclusion of loving partners from medical decisions. We need equality for all now! Not in some undefined future. We need to accelerate the process.

Many have written that the most effective way to change biased attitudes is by personal appeal. That is, making the effort to convince one person at a time by sharing your desire for equality. As difficult as that can sometimes be, as each of us appeals to that rigid relative or cranky co-worker, we will sway the majority.

And frankly, marriage equality should not be limited to couples. Any number of consenting adults who wish to join in a loving commitment to each other, should be allowed to do so. Why should polyamorous, multiple-partnered relationships be excluded? Human societies have joined in polygamous and polyandrous relationships many times and places. According to Live Science, “Researchers estimate that as many as 5 percent of Americans are currently in [polyamorous] relationships.” (http://www.livescience.com/27125-5-myths-about-polyamory.html). There is no fair basis for excluding such families in America’s future.

All committed relationships require open communication, trust, loyalty, and respect; polyfidelity is no different. One might argue that successful poly relationships demonstrate these qualities more than unexamined normative couples. So as we celebrate a milestone in Minnesota, let’s reach out to our bi, try, and poly friends and work for a future that embraces equality for all.

Greetings from the Chair

June means Father’s Day and the Twin Cities Pride Festival are upon us once again, so I’d been planning to write my column about these occasions. And I still will write about these occasions, but not quite in the way I had thought. What changed my plans were the recent extraordinary events at the Minnesota State Capitol.

If you’re reading this in the state of Minnesota, you certainly know what I’m talking about. In fact, if you’re anywhere in the United States, you’ve probably heard that Minnesota has officially become the 12th state in the Union to give same-sex couples the same right to marry as heterosexual couples. From my perspective as Board Chair of an organization dedicated to helping all men improve themselves, this is spectacularly good news. And from my perspective as a giddily happy newlywed, I cannot wait for all men to have a chance to experience the same high I’ve been on.

Without equal access to the legal benefits and personal joys of marriage, there was a de facto two tier system in place when it came to men and their relationships. Straight men had legal rights and responsibilities related to health care directives, child custody, and spousal support. To be sure, not all of these are rights that men necessarily want to exercise, but the point is that the law protected them and held them accountable in equal measure. Gay men simply didn’t have any of this. If two humans have committed to love each other, care for each other, and live together for the rest of their lives, why should their respective genders make any difference?

So the courageous actions by the Minnesota Legislature and Gov. Dayton should be welcomed and celebrated by all who are interested in men’s issues. But how does this relate to Pride and Father’s Day? The connection between same-sex marriage and Pride is obvious. Pride is usually a boisterous and exuberant weekend anyway, and I predict this year will be especially raucous and joyous, as decades of pent-up love and commitment nears the time when it can be expressed to the world.

As for Father’s Day, consider this: being a loving father means doing everything you can to allow your child to grow into a happy, healthy adult. If your child happens to be born gay, could you bear to watch them grow up and fall in love, only to be denied the full legal expression of their love? Being gay should no more prevent your child from getting married than being a redhead should prevent them from going to college.

So Happy Father’s Day to all Dad’s, and Happy Pride to all who are comfortable in their own sexual skin. What are normally happy occasions will be downright celebratory this year as some of you prepare to marry your chosen partners, and others can now be confident that your children will grow up never worrying that who they are might prevent them from marrying their true loves.

Call us about Anger Management Classes.
Presentations

Nearly every Wednesday evening, the Men's Center is proud to offer a presentation on a wide range of subjects of interest to men as well as to the wider community. This tradition has been part of the Men's Center offering since it's founding 35 years ago. These drop-in meetings require no pre-registration, and volunteer experts in the respective subjects conduct them all. Because of our primary mission, all presentations are for men only unless it is otherwise indicated in the individual descriptions.

Please read through these various descriptions to determine which is of interest to you, and consider bringing a friend. This could be an excellent introduction to the Men's Center for them. Each presentation is intended to foster personal growth and to stimulate interest in the topic.

Our presenters are Bill Baldwin, Rob Gamble, Joe Gangelhoff, John Hesch, Kelley Lorix, Andy Mickel, Bob Manson, Rhys Preston, and Rasheen Tillman.

A small fee is collected at the door for each person attending:
- Non-Members of TCMC – $5.
- Regular Members ($20 level) – $3
- Sustaining Members – FREE

All presentations meet at The Men's Center, 3249 Hennepin Ave. So, Suite 55 Minneapolis, MN 55408.

We welcome your suggestions for new topics and presenters. Please call Randy at 612-822-5892 with your ideas.

“I was disappointed to read your article in the April/May 2013 Men Talk titled ‘State Enabled Entrapment’. This article gave your readers false information and I hope you will take the opportunity to correct the information in a future publication.

This article set up a scenario of a women encouraging a man to violate an order of protection that she had been granted after making false allegations. The article gives the impression that the order of protection could be granted without the man understanding the rules. When a temporary order of protection is granted, a court hearing is set where both parties are given the opportunity to present evidence. Both parties have the opportunity to seek legal advice and be represented by an attorney. The attorney’s for both sides explain in detail what constitutes a violation of the no contact order. If either side comes to court without an attorney, the Judge explains what will constitute a violation. In the scenario given, the women could also be arrested for the violation as both parties would have been aware that they were violating a court order.

This article also implies that the man has no visitation with his children. An order of protection does not take away visitation from the non-custodial parent and in fact, the court makes sure that visitation is in place for the non-custodial parent. Furthermore, this order does not stop either parent from seeking a civil order regarding custody and visitation. I would question why the gentlemen had not seen his children in 4 months.

This article also takes a biased view that a women can get this order by telling any falsehood. This is untrue as both parties are given the opportunity to present evidence in a hearing and the court decides based on the evidence presented. This article also does not take into account the men who seek order’s of protection from violent women and are granted the orders in the same way that a women would be.

I hope that you will consider writing a less biased article that will help the men you are trying to inform protect themselves and at the same time recognize that Domestic Violence remains rampant in our society. It is unfair to victims for your publication to imply that Protection Orders are a way for men to be abused by the State and that women just use them falsely. Remember that the men you serve also have mothers, sisters, and children that are being impacted by Domestic Violence every day and this information may encourage men not to utilize this very important tool to protect themselves and their families.”

“Unsubstantiated accusations against my son by a former girlfriend landed him before a nightmarish college tribunal.” by Judith Grossman, Wall Street Journal, April 16, 2013. Excerpt: “I am a feminist. I have marched at the barricades, subscribed to Ms. magazine, and knocked on many a door in support of progressive candidates committed to women’s rights. Until a month ago, I would have expressed unqualified support for Title IX and for the Violence Against Women Act. But that was before my son, a senior at a small liberal-arts college in New England, was charged—by an ex-girlfriend—with alleged acts of “nonconsensual sex” that supposedly occurred during the course of their relationship a few years earlier...” Read more at: <http://online.wsj.com/article/SB10001424127887324600704578405280211043510.html> - Bill Ronan, 2013-04-16.
